

Missing teeth?

By Dr. Horacio Falcón

Replacing missing teeth is essential not only for aesthetic reasons but also for maintaining oral health and functionality. Fortunately, there are several options available to address the gap left by missing teeth, each catering to specific needs and preferences.

Dental implants are a popular and durable solution for replacing missing teeth. They involve the surgical placement of titanium posts into the missing area, acting as artificial tooth roots. Dental implants not only look and feel natural but also help prevent bone loss and maintain the overall structure of the jaw.

Another option is a dental bridge, which consists of artificial teeth anchored to adjacent natural teeth. Bridges are effective for replacing one or more consecutive missing teeth, restoring both function and appearance. They offer a non-surgical alternative to dental implants, making them suitable for individuals who may not be candidates for implant surgery.

For those seeking a quick temporary minimally invasive solution, removable partial dentures or dental flippers may be considered. Dental flippers are acrylic devices that can be quickly inserted and removed. While they are not a permanent solution, they provide a temporary aesthetic and semi functional improvement.

Ultimately, the choice of replacing missing teeth depends on factors such as budget, overall health, and personal preferences. Consulting with us or your dental professional is crucial to determine the most suitable option based on individual needs, ensuring a confident smile and optimal oral health.
